New Andrus Fund Builds On Founder's Legacy

Update On the Andrus Health Equity Access Fund

Andrus has launched an innovative program to expand its reach to the many children and families in our community who are often overlooked by an insurance system riddled with regulation and inefficiencies. Rather than caring for those most in need, the system renders them invisible, and leaves them without access to the resources they need.

The Andrus Health Equity Access Fund is designed to solve the problem of the under- and uninsured by opening the door to all who come to us for help, for clinical mental health supports to help finding housing, tutors, strollers, or beds for their kids.

The philanthropic legacy of John Andrus was to help the ignored, the overlooked—children whose parents lacked the means to provide them with the care and support they needed to overcome the circumstances into which they were born. The Andrus Health Equity Access Fund builds on that important legacy, providing children and families without means, without the appropriate insurance, the tools they will need to improve their lives.
